THE CODIFYING COMMISSION AND

The Excellence and Great Importance of the Code of Laus.

The people of Obio having refused to adopt the Constitution of 1874, the General Assembly, during its session of 175, provided by law for the appointment of three Commissioners and the requisite number of Clerks, to revise the general statutes of the State, and consolidate them into a compact and complete Code. The Commission was constituted by that grand old Governor, William Allen, and confirmed by the Senate, and in April, 1875, it entered upon its work.

A similar commission was constituted in the State of New York early in 1870, to revise and codify the laws of that State. Although it had the start of the Ohio Codifying Commission more than five years, it is believed that our Commission will be able to complete its work before the New York Commission gets through with its revision and consolida-

Our Codifying Commission, on entering upon its work less than four years ago, found our general statutes in the worst possible condition. We will not attempt to state that condition ourselves, when it has been done so well and so accurately by a gentleman connected with the Commission, and who has been engaged upon its work almost from its beginning; who has read up and familiarized himself with the history of Codification in all lands and in all ages. He depicts the condition of our laws as found give this part of the labor their closest to be at the opening of the work of the Commission. Mr. Amos Layman is the gentleman we refer to; and we clip the act creating the Commission, and in following paragraph from an address prepared by him, and delivered not long ago, before the Tyndall Association of this city:

"The laws of Ohio presented a tangle and jumble of contradictions, complications, and uncertainties, at the sight of which the student and the foreign jurist stood aghast, and through which our trained lawyers even found it difficult to pick their way. More than a hundred volumes of statutes, and nearly as many volumes of Supreme Court reports, with incomplete and imperfect indexes and digests, rendered the research formidable, and the attainment of accurate knowledge of the laws of Obio and their true construction a very rare thing, even among the best lawyers. Great difficulty was found, in many cases, in determining what laws were in force and what laws were repealed, and the courts even m de mistakes in this regard, and in the matter of interpretation.

Such being the condition of the laws of Ohio when the Commission entered upon its work, nuder the act creating it and prescribing its duties, we will let Mr. Layman state what the Commission was required to do under that act. We quote from his address as follows:

The Commissioners are required to ject, ought to be brought together, omitg redundant or absolete enactments and making such alterations as may be necessary, to reconcile the contradic tions supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original tex; to prepare n in s w th reference to the origmal text, and, as far as practicable, to the decisions of the State courts, explaining or expounding the same, so as to suggest to the legislature such contradictions, omissions, and imperfections, as may appear in the original text, with the mode in which they have reconciled, supplied and amended the same; to designate such statutes, or parts of statutes, as in their judgment ought to be repealed, with the reasons for such repeal; to rec ommend the passage of new acts or parts of acts, as such repeal may, in their judgment, render necessary; and to prepare and furnish the annotations, embracing the decisions of the Saprame Court, Su preme Cour. Commission, and references to the decisions of other Courts of the State, as well as a complete, accurate, and co pious analytic index

"These duties could not be faithfully and satisfactority performed without carefully re-writing nearly every section of the statutes. The preparation of the notes alone requires a constant study of the reported cases; and the preparation of many of the new sections involves the necessity of weighing conflicing authorities, searching for and applying the legal principles which should govern, and deliberating very carefully upon the effect of the language in which the results of their investigations are clothed. The adequate performance of this labor demands as much care, skill and learning, as that of a judge who decides and writes opinions upon difficult questions | eyes were upon me, I dare not tell him of law; but the Commissioners are not, as the Judge generally is, assisted by the pierce me through. I told the whole arguments of counsel, and the citations truth, and when I had finished, he said of authorities; and he is not compelled as the Commissioners are, so to guard the language employed in defining the shall marry you; we will never meet conclusions which are reached, that they again.' I begged him on my knees not conclusions which are reached, that they can be incorporated into the permanent to leave me, but it was of no avail. When law of the State, and become immutable the dawn came he arose, kissed me in the very words in which they are progood by, and with a 'God bless you," nounced. "The extent of the work of this Commission is immeasurably great, and the horrible in its darkness; my mind lost wisdom manif-sted in its performance its reasoning powers, and thus I passed will, it is be leved, be early recognized." the State, or the code of Ohio laws, when completed by the Commission and enacted by the legislature, will contain four statu es, arranged according to a well de fined and logical order. If, as is hoped, the joint work and action of the Commission and the General Assembly at this session succeed in reducing the unrevised statutes (some thirteen or fourteen hundred in number) to the same order, and in combining them with those already revised into one complete code, a great work will have been accomplished, the importance and value of which can hardly be over-estimated."

"The result in presenting the statute law of the State as an orderly and inteligible whole, will be ample compensa ion for the attention bestowed and the ime and money expended in attaining

The Governor further says, very justly, that the duties yet to be performed by the Commission, as prescribed by the act creating it, "will require much patient labor."

After the completion of the revision, and the enactment, by the General As-sembly, of the remainder of it, the Commission will have to put it together as a complete code, for adoption, pro forms; and after its adoption by the Legislature as a whole, the Commission is required to prepare and furnish the annotations, embracing the decisions of the Supreme Court, Supreme Court Commission, and references to the decisions of other Courts of the State, as well as a complete accurate, and copious analytic index; and then, to insure accuracy and perfec tion in printing the entire and complete work, the Commission and its clerks who are now experts in the business, must attention. In no other way can the Re vised Statutes be completed and put before the people, as contemplated by the manner and style alike creditable to the General Assembly, the Commission and the State. It will be a code of laws for the ages to come, like unto the Justinian Code, and the Code Napoleon. While it required over fifteen years to prepare the Justinian Code, and ten years to prepare the Code Napoleon, our Obio Code will be completed and given to the people in less than five years from the time our Codifying Commission was constituted. And then, our Code will be a great credit to all who had anything to do with it, as well as an honor to the State. The people approve it, and insist on its being properly completed; and they will not be satisfied with anything short of this. We commend this fact to the careful attention and consideration of the General Assembly, hoping that it will so act as to promote the object for which the Cod-

Ten years ago, in Lewis county, Kenucky, a young lawyer named Phil Hodge married Miss Addie Sillet, amid flowers, music and hearty congratulations of friends. When the guests had departed. Hodge went to the bridal chamber, where he remained during the night. At early dawn he left the house, and in passing bring together all statutes and parts of out he met a man servant of his wife's statutes, which, from similarity of sub father, to whom he said, "Tell your mistress I am gone forever." The new made ather-in-law, upon receiving this message, hurried to his daughter's room, and to his amazement, he found her still in her wedding robes, with hair disheveled and vail torn off, and in a state of excitement. A severe spell of fever followed, but never in her wildest delirium did she betray the cause of her agony, and thus it has remained a theme of conjecture ever since. To a friend the other day she for the first time told the cause.

Here is the story : "Lon Foliet and I have been raised to gether. I had received most marked at tention from him, but I never dreamed of marrying him, for he had a mother and sister depending upon him for a ivelihood. Phil Hodge, who I only knew a few years, courted me, I cepted blm, and my admiration for him empted me to believe I loved him. The night of our wedding Lon and I were sitting a little apart from the crowd; our conversation was only of ourselves, and I confess I then felt Lon loved me, and he was more of my happiness than I had ever dreamed of. Pull Hodge overheard a few words and saw our earnest manner. When he came to my room he found me dressed till as I was when I eft the parlor, and, showing his surprise asked me 'What was the matter me?' To which I answered as indiffer-ently as possible, 'Nothing.' We ex-changed several commonplace remarks. fter which he asked me quite barsaly, 'Addie, dit Lon Foliet ever tell you be loved you?' I answered 'No.' 'What was your conversation to night?" anght but the truth; his eyes seemed to with coldness, calmess and stubborn resolution, 'Addie, you love Lon Foliet; he passed out from me forever. My feelings were indescribable; the room was its reasoning powers, and thus I passed many weeks. On Tuesday night last, Leonidas Grover, who resided in the vicinity of Newtown, Fountain county, met his death in branches last session, but the enrolling a way that is probably without a parallel clerk of the Senate failed to give it the in this or any other country. Mr. Grover was a widower, living on a farm with a married daughter and her husband. On the evening referred to, the married couple had been absent on a visit to some neighbors, and, upon returning at a late hour, entered the house, finding Part fourth contains three titles, and everything to all appearances in usual order, and supposing that Mr. Grover had already retired, went to bed themselves. Next morning the daughter got Codifying Commission and its work.
